Is there a way to check if any disk on Mac is partitioned? I.e. is there a way to check if a disk in the disk utility is partitioned and which one and if it has any partitions, and where they are located? A: Disk Utility and diskutil both support partition data: First list the disks Click on a disk In the context menu click on Show Data to list the partitions You can then work out which is partitioned and which has a label/type. A: Your best bet is to run diskutil list in Terminal. Also, you can click the Disk icon in the dock, this brings up Disk Utility. You can then go into the File menu and choose the Open Disk Utility window for the selected volume in question. From the resulting dialogue box, you can check the bit-for-bit copy of each partition by selecting the "Show" icon. You should note that the bit-for-bit copy is identical to that you'd see if you ran diskutil list. A: ditto on Ian's answer, but I wanted something a little easier. In Disk Utility's Info tab, each partition has a label. The label shows up as the name of the volume, e.g. "Users" or "Video". So if you select a partition, you can click "Label" in the window that pops up, and choose a label that makes sense. Former New Orleans Saints tight end Jimmy Graham tried to get a shot a free agent deal with the Saints and apparently left without an offer, a league source told ESPN NFL Insider Adam Schefter. Graham told his agent he would be open to signing a one-year deal with the Saints for a significant portion of the league's $50 million franchise tag if he wasn't guaranteed to be on the team's roster in Week 1. But the Saints

I am in a campaign that is run primarily with D&D 3.5 and most of my characters are 3.5 so we are not using Pathfinder at all so I am mostly a V3.5 player, though I got 3.5 material to work with for my character. This was a bit more difficulty then I was looking for, but it has created a fascinating character so I would not want to screw him up so I went on a hunt for the answers I needed. I have a druid and I would like to know what I can do to make my druid a quick fire-fire-fire-fire spellcasting character. It seems like the casting is spread around so to speak but I was told there is something that I can do to make up for the variety in ranks. Does anyone know how to best combine the various levels of ranks and spending at the druid level? In particular, I would be interested in fire-dragons, but anything else would be helpful. A: Casting Off There are a number of spells that can be cast as early as f678ea9f9e
